FIFA (originally FIFA Soccer) is a series of videogames, distributed by EA Sports, created by Headstrong Games. Developed by EA Canada, Kite & Lightning. The franchise incorporates many professional football leagues, teams, and players, and has amassed a dedicated user base. FIFA 20 is the fifteenth major installment of the franchise, released in September 2019. Set in the weeks leading up to a future FIFA World Cup™, the game offers a large variety of historically accurate teams and styles of play. Controversy has arisen over the history of the franchise since its early, more arcade-like, releases, but with the increasingly polished nature of the gameplay found in the series, this has diminished in recent years. The genre has become increasingly popular in recent years; EA has released three more titles, FIFA 19, FIFA 18 and FIFA 17, since 2015. How is FIFA 20 different? FIFA 20 tackles a wide range of issues traditionally present in videogame franchises, and attempts to answer the questions behind them. Pitchside view While aiming to balance the gameplay of the on-field action, FIFA 20 brings the commentators up to the level of the action, with numerous new features. Features such as the RUM (Real Umpire Manager) are an attempt to make the commentary feel more authentic, as are the new HUD (Heads-Up Display), which includes information on various gameplay elements to make the referee calls easier to see, and Show Player Highlights, which allows the action to be replayed from certain critical moments, or specific events, on replay. The pitchside view, which allows for players to be seen moving on all sides of the pitch, is also a major feature of the game, developed in conjunction with FIFA license holders, to bring the game even closer to the real thing. Players can also be viewed from multiple angles, and diving and simulation tackles are included. “When we sat down with our license holders and looked at the critical aspects of the pitch, the exposure and movement on the pitch, and the presentation of the players and players’ movements, we knew that we needed to give the game a very clear visual identity.” Andreas Wagner, Senior Designer, FIFA Players can even virtually control plays through the ‘Play’ menu, and take charge of the pitch themselves. ‘Team Tactics’ give real-life managers the ability to set up their team on the pitch
